JOEL COWLEY

Joel Cowley serves as the president of Angus Genetics, Inc. (AGI), a subsidiary of the American Angus Association (AAA) that develops new technologies to benefit the entire beef industry and conducts genetic evaluations for AAA as well as other breed associations in the United States and Canada.

Cowley earned an associate of arts degree in agricultural education from Northeastern Junior College, a bachelor's degree in animal science from Colorado State University, a master's degree in animal breeding from Texas A&M University and an MBA from Michigan State University. He and his wife, Tammy, reside in St. Joseph, MO and have two daughters, both college graduates.

PAUL DYSKTRA

From his home office in Chappell, Nebraska, Paul works closely with ranchers and feedyard managers in the central and western U.S. to help them target the brand. He shares reports on cattle and beef market trends in the biweekly CAB Insider, and provides education for ranchers and beef community partners in retail and food service. Paul also oversees Certified Angus Beef® brand Natural on participating farms and ranches.
